

Amanda Nash Bio:

Amanda practices management-side labour and employment law, advising federally and provincially regulated employers on a wide range of matters. Her approach to her legal practice focuses on getting to know and understand her clients' business and needs, helping ensure that her advice considers the whole picture. Recently, Amanda has been advising clients on a variety of Covid-19 related legal matters.

Amanda regularly provides advice on a broad spectrum of employment issues, including employment standards, contract and policy development as well as strategic advice on disciplinary matters and employee terminations. From a labour law perspective, Amanda has experience and a particular interest in collective bargaining and collective agreement interpretation.

Amanda has taught labour relations at Memorial University and presents regularly with the McInnes Cooper Labour and Employment Practice Group on important and emerging topics in labour and employment.

Brittany Keating Bio:

Brittany's practice is focused on labour and employment. She has experience in grievance and interest arbitration, collective bargaining, human rights, wrongful dismissal and workplace privacy. She assists and advises clients regarding imposing discipline, terminations, the duty to accommodate, collective agreement interpretation and administration, drafting employment contracts and workplace policies. Brittany has been providing support and guidance to employers on the labour and employment issues associated with the COVID-19 pandemic.

Brittany has represented employers in wrongful dismissal claims, human rights complaints, employment standards complaints, grievance arbitration and judicial review, and has conducted settlement negotiations in respect of a wide range of labour and employment related matters.

Brittany is a member of the Law Society of Newfoundland and Labrador and previously served as Section Chair of the Canadian Bar Association-NL Young Lawyers Forum. She currently sits on the Board of Directors for The Murphy Centre.